REC'D

A great deal of mystery surrounded the little Cabin in the woods in which lived, Margaret and her Spencer brother, they had come ~~from England~~ from England to the heart of the great woods. but no one knew their whereabouts. Their Cabin lay an out post of the R.N.W.P. who had happened to drop in on them the first time. He became a frequent visitor, and a dear friend. One day the peaceful quiet of the great woods was broken, for as the monthly paywagon of the R.N.W.P. was driving along to masked Bandits attempted to stop it. but after a struggle were foiled by his. The driver whipping up his mules got back to the Camp. One of the bandits lost his mask in the struggle and at the stupidity of his confederate kicked and abused him, although he was badly wounded, great consternation reigned in the camp when the driver told his story, for he told them that when the mask fell from the bandits face he was shure he recognized the Englishman Spencer. While the foreman ~~was~~ over the matter to the Mounted Police the men ~~went~~ to the law into their own hands and capture the bandits. They gathered up weapons, rope and Guns, started out to the logging camp, bent on vengeance- while this was going on Campbell left the the Spencer Cabin paused at the door of a young Indian squaw who had been ill and ~~was~~ usual kind way befriended her by sawing ~~and~~ wood to keep her fire burning during the day. Neola worshipped the white man for his kindness and confided to him that Sam her husband was being bad again and asked Campbell to try and make him ~~and~~ his ways, Campbell promised a rode away, to the Post.

The Seargent tells him he has an unpleasant task for him he must arrest the Brother of the Girl he loves. He shows him a letter from Scotland yard with a description of one T. Ralph Spencer also his photograph and tells him Spencer is wanted for embezzlement, Campbell struggles between love and duty but only for a moment, for duty is first in the heart of a member of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, during the talk the foreman of the logging Camp rushes up, told of the hold up also that the driver thought Spencer was one of the Bandits. So putting aside the first matter temporarily Campbell started out after the bandits. after a long he came upon the infuriated loggers who had found Spencer a were about to string him up, he shot the rope which was around Spencers neck and escaped the mob with Spencer as his prisoner, Spencer gave Campbell his word that he would go to the Barracks alone if Campbell would only go for his sister and tell
